MYERS + ZANGHI FAMILY

All in the Family: Kate & Jolene

Kate Zanghi and Jolene Myers have been co-workers for the past six years, but they've been in each other's lives for decades. You see, they are not only part of the Nova family, but they are also family. These sisters-in-law lend their talents to our project management and marketing communications teams, respectively.

We sat down with them to explore the ins and outs of what it's like when work really is all in the family.

What brought you to Nova?

KATE: Honestly, Jolene, did. Before Nova, she was working at a newspaper. She told me, I'm starting at this new place. And I was like, "Health care?! What are you doing?" Then I saw how much she loved her job.

She loved everybody she worked with, I remember her raving about her boss, and how wonderful she was, and the culture. So, the second I saw a job opening for the analyst position, I decided to go for it. Jolene loved it there and it sounded like such a fantastic place to work. So that's why I made the change. And it was well worth it.

What makes Nova a special place to work?

“

It's a rewarding, collaborative environment.

—JOLENE

JOLENE: There are so many characters at Nova. I say that lovingly. When you think about family, there are so many characters, too. So when we're all together, be it around the table at home or in the office, I love that there are so many types of personalities, and people who communicate in different ways and absorb information in various ways. It brings so much value because you're always learning something new from all those characters. The different backgrounds, stories, and experiences enhance the human connections.

I can't think of very many people at Nova who are not approachable, who are not similar to an aunt, uncle, cousin, or sibling, that you can't tap on the shoulder and say, "Hey, I need some advice on this." It's a rewarding, collaborative environment.
